System Schröders safety doors:

Expansion of Product Range and New Customers Thanks to Licensing System

Erkelenz, Germany, July 2020 – Designing and manufacturing safety doors and gates involves a lot of effort. Compliance with legal requirements, extensive audits and the development itself often take more time and money than expected. With its unique licensing program System Schröders offers manufacturing companies the opportunity to expand their product range throughout Europe with advanced and CE-certified safety doors.

For more than 40 years, the German company System Schröders has been developing modern steel safety doors for fire-, smoke- and burglary protection as well as sound insulation, which can be flexibly used for the realization of demanding requirements from architects, builders and planners. The doors comply with current European standards, which offers additional security and opportunities to manufacturers. Currently, more than 40 licensed and certified companies in Europe and Asia are exclusively building and distributing System Schröders safety doors and thus taking advantage of the possibility to offer state-of-the-art closures in their portfolio.

Licensing program brings benefits to manufacturers

The advantage of the license system for companies partnering with System Schröders is convincing: Thanks to the extensive door range, they can start manufacturing the respective security door immediately after purchasing a suitable license. There is no need to invest time and budget in research, development and testing, as all these steps have already been carried out by System Schröders. This allows manufacturers to expand their range in a short time, to comply with individual requirements and to acquire new customers all over Europe.

As an additional benefit, System Schröders supports all licensees with profound know-how and continuously develops its products and patents in order to meet current European standards, such as the product standard EN 16034.
